

World of Tanks official forum → World of Tanks Game Discussion → Gameplay Discussion

Banned For Team Kill After Shot Three Times by Teammate

Started by GT500org, Today, 04:32 AM

GT500org

Posted Today, 04:32 AM

Last night while I was playing WoT, a teammate started shooting at me. After three hits it became very obvious that he was doing it on purpose, so I shot back a couple of times. My first shot missed, and my second shot hit. I was promptly banned for 2 days after the second shot hit him. This can be seen in this highlight (http://www.twitch.tv/gt500_live/c/4343520) on my Twitch stream. I have also exported that video to YouTube, since some people have issues with Twitch:

While creating the highlight I noticed that I had accidentally hit another teammate while I was shooting at a small tank, but you can clearly see that I was not aiming for them (the shot looked good to me, so I don't know how I hit my teammate).

My understanding of how the auto-ban system for team kills works is that it is based on the ratio of damage done to friendlies vs enemies. As my Twitch channel clearly shows, I tend to suck pretty bad at WoT, and I am lucky if I even get a single shot in before I get killed. Since I have team killed a bot that was advertising a gold selling scam site and took a few shots at a team mate who was advertising his Twitch stream and claiming to give out free gold codes (plus whatever other accidents I have had with damaging teammates), I probably have a pretty high ratio of damage to teammates vs damage to enemies.

If I am in any danger of being permanently banned from this game for stupid stuff like that, then I would simply prefer a refund for any premium content I have purchased, and I'll go play something else. There's no point in wasting any more time with this game for me (especially since it is so glitchy with streaming software and I have to keep switching between Windowed mode and Fullscreen in order to fix it).

I would have posted this in the support section, however it doesn't look like the support forum was actually intended for stuff like this.